FOREWORD

For anyone whose name appears in this "List of Descendants of James Lemen and Mary (Crow) Beggs" and who has never had access to "The Book o' Beggs" published in Denver, Colorado in 1928—and upon which Robert Henry and Clara (Beardsley) Beggs collaborated—it will be of interest to include some brief excerpts from their record, concerning the three generations in our direct line in the United States of America that preceded that of James L. Beggs.

To anyone interested in the old origins of the family of Beggs, I recommend the chapters in "The Book o' Beggs" by Robert H. Beggs, entitled "The Scotch Irish" and the later one, in the same volume, by Clara B. Beggs, "Gleanings from Antrim, from Ayrshire and from The British Museum Library," which records her own personal research for early progenitors of the family. On this trip in 1927 she was able to locate the tombstone of James Beggs, Sr., born in 1617, and to establish the fact that he was the father of James Beggs, Jr., who with his wife, Elizabeth Hardy, landed on the New Jersey shore "sometime prior to 1730." Both father and son were Ruling Elders in the Presbyterian Church in Ballycarry, Antrim, in the Province of Ulster. She adds: "The years of Beggs sojourn in Ireland were stormy ones for all people of Scotch descent and hastened their departure for America."

"About 1745 James and Elizabeth (Hardy) Beggs removed to Augusta County, which is now Rockingham County, Virginia. Here he engaged in farming with a fair degree of success, but served a while as constable and also as road overseer. "In colonial times the office of constable 'was one of high importance including functions now assigned to various other officers.' (Encyclopedia Americana, Vol. V. Article Constables). As appointments to this office were made by the county court composed of a number of justices, these appointments may be taken as evidence that the appointees were men of character and responsibility." (pg. 25) "Book o' Beggs." James Beggs died in 1779. His second son Thomas was born about 1730 and moved with his parents to Augusta County, Virginia. * * * Thomas was brought up on his father's farm and seems to have remained with him some years after attaining his majority.

In 1764 or 1765 he married Sarah Barnes, daughter of Charles and Elizabeth (McDowell) Barnes and took up his residence on a farm of his own in Brock's Gap, near that of his father. * * * After the outbreak of the Revolutionary War, he was appointed Captain of the militia from Rockingham County, May 22, 1778. In 1779 he served as "commissary" in one of the new companies organized for State defense and early in 1780 fell a victim to "camp fever," at Petersburg, Virginia."

Thomas and Sarah (Barnes) Beggs were the parents of four sons and one daughter. The youngest of these children, Charles Beggs was born October 30, 1775 in Augusta County, Virginia. He married Dorothea Trumbo in Rockingham County, August 1, 1797. Immediately, afterwards, he set out with his young wife, on horseback, along with others from the same County, Virginia, and probably over 'the wilderness road' to Woodford County, Kentucky.

"After two years, he—with his wife and infant daughter, Elizabeth—removed to the north of the Ohio river into what is now Clark County, Indiana. In the course of a few years, he was followed by his brothers, and brother-in-law; also, by his step-father, Colonel Stephen Ruddell (who had married Sarah (Barnes) Beggs in 1782.) Like most Scotch-Irishmen they were conscientiously opposed to slavery, and the hope of escaping the blighting influence of this 'peculiar institution' had much to do with their removal to Indiana. * * * Charles' elder brother, James, who had graduated from William and Mary College at Williamsburg in the Old Dominion, cast the deciding vote which made Indiana a free State. * * * The Territory of Indiana was organized in 1800 with the capital at Vincennes and with General William Henry Harrison as governor. Although Charles Beggs had just made his appearance from the south side of the river, his character and ability were immediately recognized and he was chosen as a member, from Clark County, of the Convention to draft a constitution for the new territory. He proceeded to Vincennes where he soon made the acquaintance of Governor Harrison and they became close friends. He was with Harrison in his campaign against the Indians on the upper Wabash, commanding a company of light-horse in the battle of Tippecanoe, and where Harrison at the head, acquired sufficient military glory to sweep him into the presidency of the United States." (Book o' Beggs, pp. 38-39)

"Charles Beggs resided twenty-nine years in Clark County, Indiana, honored and esteemed by all who knew him. As a farmer, a merchant, a miller and a trader he accumulated sufficient property comfortably to support and educate his large family. He served Indiana in her territorial and State legislatures. His distinguished services in the army and in the halls of legislation were of great value to the people of his county." ("Historical Sketches"—J. N. Gridely, p. 429.

He was a staunch member of the Methodist Church, doing much to build and support it in whatever community he lived. In the year 1829, Captain Beggs removed from Clark County, Indiana to Morgan County, Illinois with his wife Mary Ruddell, and their six children, where he lived for forty years. He died Oct. 21, 1869, lacking only nine days of being ninety-four years of age.

Charles Beggs' first wife (Dorothea Trumbo) died on May 12, 1811. She had borne him six children, two of whom died in infancy. The oldest daughter, Elizabeth, was then thirteen years old and the youngest child, who was his oldest son, was then three years old. (This son, George W. and his wife Huldah Garner became the parents in 1844 of Robert H. Beggs, co-author of "The Book o' Beggs.") On November 12, 1812, Charles Beggs married Mary Ruddell of Woodford County, Kentucky—oldest child of his step-brother Cornelius and Margaret (Wilson) Ruddell. Mary Ruddell was twenty-two years old at the time of her marriage, fifteen years her husband's junior. In his "Historical Sketches," published in Virginia, Illinois in August, 1907, J. N. Gridley says of her (pp. 429, 444, 445): "She was slight in stature, delicate in appearance, modest and unassuming. She became an affectionate step-mother to Charles Beggs' young children and the mother of nine, of whom eight were born in Clark County, Indiana. In the quiet country church-yard at Zion, in Morgan County, Illinois is a small, white stone on which is written: "Mary, wife of Charles Beggs, born April 28, 1790, died August 4, 1871, Aged 81 years, 3 months and 6 days." This stone will crumble away but the good deeds this noble woman performed during her long and active life still live and will continue to live long after the Zion Church yard shall have been forgotten."

James Lemen Beggs was the third son and child of Charles and Mary (Ruddell) Beggs and was born in Charlestown, Indiana, November 11, 1819. The town of his birth had been named in honor of his father. When he was ten years old his parents moved from Clark County, Indiana to Morgan County, Illinois, onto a farm which his father had purchased, ten miles west of where Ashland, Illinois now stands, the town that James L. Beggs in later years aided in founding. The old Charles Beggs Homestead still stands (1947) in a good state of preservation, despite the one hundred and eighteen years of usage and of sun and storms. The predominance of walnut wood in its construction—both inside and outside—has given it sturdiness and beauty.

On June 17, 1846, James Beggs married Mary Jane Ward, who died six months later. On August 30, 1848, he married Mary Crow, daughter of the Reverend William and Susanna (Hall) Crow. Mary Ann Crow was born December 18, 1828, in Cass County, Illinois.

With the exception of about seven years, spent in Lawrence, Kansas, James and Mary Beggs lived in and near Ashland, Illinois, where James Beggs was a farmer and stockman. In 1862, he united with the Methodist Episcopal Church and lived a quiet and consistent Christian life, in the fullest acceptance of that term, to the day of his death. He was loved and respected by all who knew him." (a tribute by his pastor at his funeral, Dec. 24, 1889.)

James and Mary (Crow) Beggs were the parents of three daughters and five sons, each of whom grew to maturity and reared a family. This "List of Descendants" records to date (July 1947) James and Mary Beggs' eight children, forty-two grandchildren, sixty great-grandchildren, thirty-seven great-great-grandchildren and two great-great-great-grandchildren; one hundred and forty-nine in all.

Susan Ella Beggs, who was born June 12, 1849 heads the list of their descendants and her great-great-granddaughter Donna Claire Somers, born January 29, 1947 is the latest one. A record covering almost ninety-eight years and taking this branch of the Beggs family into the ninth generation from the original James Beggs and Elizabeth (Hardy) who founded it in New Jersey in 1730.

EXCERPTS

FROM THE BOOK "INDIANA" OF THE SERIES "AMERICAN COMMONWEALTHS"—"A REDEMPTION FROM SLAVERY"

By J. P. Dunn, Jr., Secretary of the Indiana Historical Society

Published in 1904 by Houghton, Mifflin and Co.

Chapter 10, page 355—James Beggs was elected to the Indiana General Assembly Feb. 1807. "At this election there was an increased show of strength by the anti-slavery people in the eastern counties."

Page 356—"James Beggs might have made more claim to greatness than any other member of this legislature. He was one of three brothers who came west in the latter part of the last century, settled for a short time in Kentucky, and then came north of the Ohio because it was free soil, or at least more nearly so than Kentucky. They were all Virginians of Irish descent, the sons of Thomas Beggs, a commissary in the Revolutionary army. Being fairly well-to-do, each bought a five hundred acre tract in Clark's Grant and settled down to farming. James was a graduate of William and Mary; the other two had good common-school educations. They were religious pioneers. John, the oldest, was a Baptist—later a follower of Alexander Campbell, and the others were stanch Methodists. They had enough Virginia in them to be very fond of reading and not at all covetous of hard work. John was for some years a judge of the Clark County courts. Charles was a captain of militia, and served with credit at Tippecanoe. James was several times in the legislature. Beyond this they were not known in public life, but in the Falls country they were men of distinction, men of great strength, of great heart, of great brain. Their qualities made them factors of great importance in local politics, and during the territorial period they were the head and front of the anti-slavery party in Clark."

Page 358—"The anti-slavery people were now thoroughly roused to the danger of the situation, and determined to make a vigorous resistance in Congress. In Clark County a mass meeting was called for October 10, at Springville, then county seat, to take action on the legislative resolution. There was a large attendance and a general harmony of sentiment. John Beggs was elected chairman and Davis Floyd secretary. On motion, Abraham Little, John Owens, Charles Beggs, Robert Robertson and James Beggs were appointed a committee to draw a memorial against the legislature's resolutions. It is probable that James Beggs prepared the memorial. He was best fitted of the committeemen to do so, and its occasional verging on Scripture style, together with its statement that 'a great number of citizens, in various parts of the United States, are preparing, and many have actually emigrated to this Territory, to get free from a Government which does tolerate slavery,' indicate him the author. This memorial is peculiarly memorable because it promulgated a theory which was new to Indiana and to the nation—the doctrine of 'Squatter Sovereignty.' It antedates by forty years the letter of General Cass in which this doctrine is commonly supposed to have been first enunciated."

Page 367—"On Sept. 26, the legislature of 1808 met at Vincennes pursuant to a call of the governor issued on Aug. 17. * * * Representatives Thomas and Beggs were opposed to the introduction of slavery, but had no objection to division.

Page 370—"The petitions still continued to come in. On the 13th (Oct. 1808) three anti-slavery petitions were presented: from Charles Beggs and others; etc."

Chapter 11, page 406—"The deciding vote of James Beggs on this occasion has always been a matter of just pride to his family. In a recent letter his venerable daughter, Mrs. Armstrong, of Laporte says: "My Father being President of the Council gave the casting vote which made Indiana a free state; for which I say "God bless James Beggs."

Chapter 11, page 390—"Over in Clark County was growing up the village of Charlestown, which had been laid out in 1807 by Charles Beggs, and there, Jennings knew were people who agreed with him in sentiment (anti-slavery). * * * With a determination to make a trial, the young aspirant mounted his horse and traveled on to Charlestown, where he found the Beggs brothers and their numerous friends."
